One of the first exoplanets to be imaged directly is not the plain Jane it seemed. Instead, it may be a rocky planet covered with lava.
Most planets are too small, dim and close to their parent stars to be photographed. But Hubble Space Telescope images from 2004 and 2006 revealed a Jupiter-like dot around the star Fomalhaut, which lies 25 light years away. The apparent planet, named Fomalhaut b, appeared inside a gap in adusty disc surrounding the star, suggesting it had carved out the space during its orbits.
Early on, though, the dot exhibited behaviour unbecoming of a planet, dropping in brightness by a factor of two between 2004 and 2006.
"It immediately struck me as weird," says Markus Janson of Princeton University. "I thought something more complex must be going on here than, 'There's light from a planet.'"
Now Janson and his colleagues have analysed new infrared observations – the most sensitive yet – made by NASA's Spitzer Space Telescope. They found nothing at the wavelengths where a Jupiter-sized planet should be brightest.
"There's really no wiggle room left for claiming that Fomalhaut b is a directly imaged [Jupiter-sized] planet," says Ray Jayawardhana of the University of Toronto, Canada.

Standard features

Manage Category

Note that: CMS Pro automatically creates one category, which is the root category named News (this name can be change in configuration) and all categories that administrator create after are children of the root category.

You can change name of root category at CMS Pro =>Configuration =>News Setting =>Root CMS Pro Name. The name includes characters and number; space and other special character will be replaced by the "-" sign. (Important: After changing name of root category, administrator has to Re-index Category for updating)

If category and news are enabled/disabled, they will be displayed/hidden at frontend (related news, latest news, search result, tagged news are included).

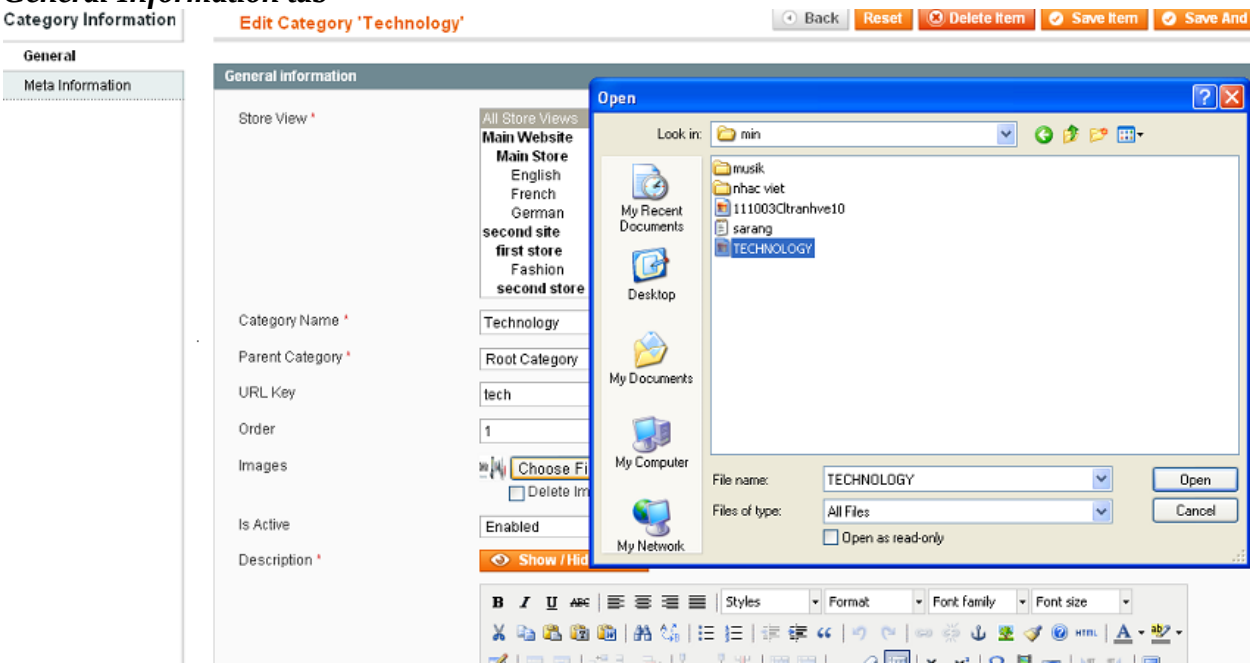
Inherit rule:

One category has only one parent and it inherits store view of its parent category. However, in case that parent category is root category, it will allow selecting store view. If parent category is disable/enable, all children categories will be disable/enable.
News can be belong to more than one category (but one is better) and its store view is combination of parent categories' store view. Consider the case that one news is belong to only one category and this category is deleted, the news will be children of root category (must redefine parent category when edit news). If parent category is disable/enable, all news that belongs to this category will be disable/enable.

Add new category

Go to CMS Pro => Manage Categories, click on the <Add Category> button to add more category. Then, start fulfilling all necessary fields.
You must sure that some required fields below are correct.

General Information tab



Store View: required, not present and not required if your web-shop is single-store model. Its categories and news are visible only on selected store view (see Inherit Rule).
Category Name: required, name is displayed on frontend.
Parent Category: required (see Inherit Rule).

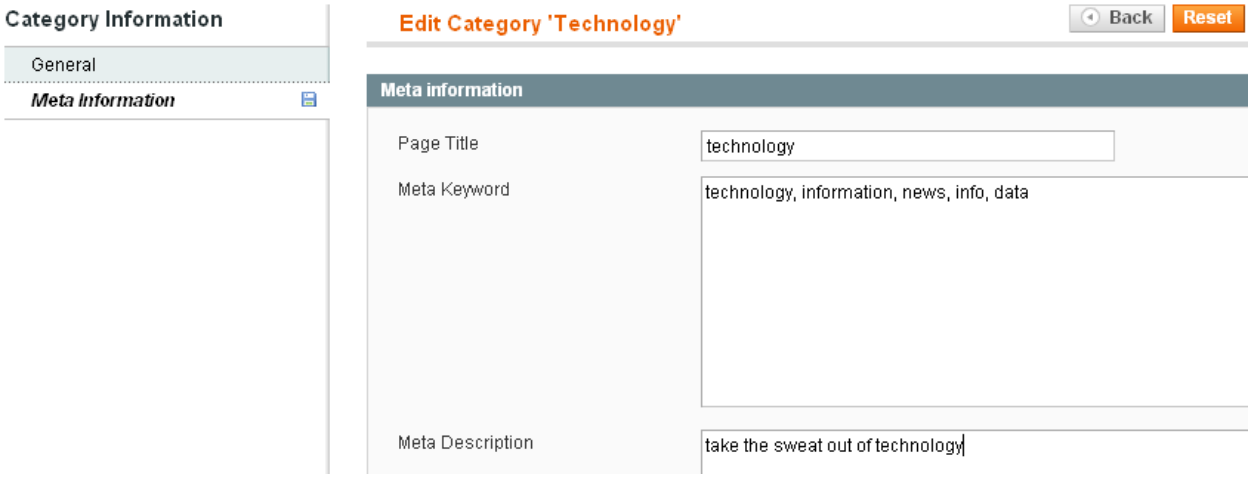
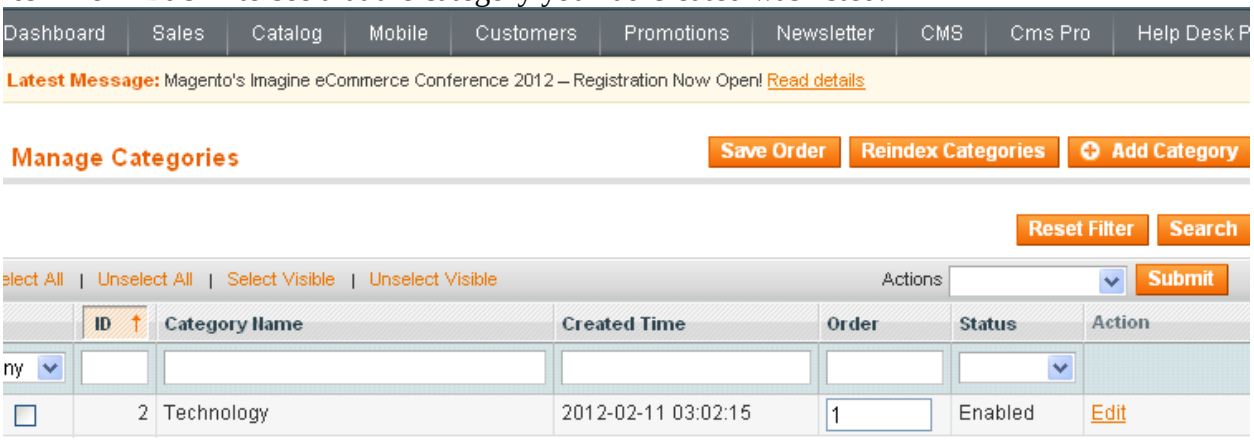
URL key: For URL rewrite (SEO). If leave it blank, URL key will be replaced by Category name (space and special character will be replaced by the "-" sign).
Order: displayed position on top menu/site menu at frontend
Images: representative image for category (image name should not contain special characters or space; otherwise they will be replaced by the "_" sign).
Is Active: visible on frontend if you set this field to enable (see Inherit Rule).
Description: required.

Meta Information tab (for SEO)



After inserting enough information, click on <Save and Continue edit> to review, then <Save item> or <Back> to see that the category you had created was listed.



If added more one category, you will see the Parent Category field was updated like this

Consider the Parent Category field; remember that if root category is selected, you can not select store view for new category. Otherwise (in case of any children categories), the value of store view will be inherited and can not change as the picture below (for reason, see Inherit Rule)

After finishing the process of creating categories, back to Manage Categories page to review. As we can see, list of categories are displayed in tree format and their levels are presented clearly.
